It is often remarked by strangers visiting our Stae that we show a larger proportion of good horses than any other State in the Union. Returning to the street, a queer-shaped audience was formed by the citizens arranging themselves on either side of and behind the speaker's platform and the Huntington Guards in front. Decoration hymns were finely sung by a male quartette-Messrs. Becker, Miller, Orvis and Taylor. Prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Vincent, after which Mr. L. H. Conklin, who presided, introduced the orator, Rev. E. Horr of Oswego.

he was four-faced. His audience must pardon him for turning his back upon a part of them and charge it to the arrangement of the platform. He would not to-day pronounce a funeral oration. That had been said long ago. Since then, the dark shadows had gone and we were here to honor, not to bury the dead. We bring not tears alone, but gratitude and pride. Some are bereaved but the dead are not theirs alone. They are ours. Once men were patriotic, yet we wondered if they could fight; but the re-echoing walls of Sumter re-assured us. One question this war has settled-nationality. We are no longer a confederation, but a union. We are no longer Yorkers merely, but Americans. Some day, too, in the South, the government of love shall supplant that of fear. Our flag is an emblem of our aspiartions,-the white for purity, the red, valor, the blue, justice.

Said in no spirit of self-adulation, our coutry is great. Uncle Sam is rich enough in undivided resources to give us all a farm and, some one truly says our praries, are worth more than our gold mines. This land the great God has given us in which to work out the problem of selfgovernment. To this land we invite foreigners, though not their customs. We must keep the Bible and the Sabbath. Our means of education are great. The newspaper is an eminent teacher. The common schools are free. A boy may go from the alphabet to the college without expense. Under these influences our foreigners soon will not differ from those to the "manor born."

During the war, a poor man was among the drafted. He could not leave his family and at a great sacrifice, procured a substitute. The substitute was killed and for a long time filled an un-He died for me." And so if we to-day were to rear a monument to our fallen soldiers we would inscribe thereon "They died for us."

Our limits do no justice to the oration. The delivery throughout was impressive and peculiarly agreeable. The benediction was pronounced by the Rev. Mr. Hewitt, after which Mr. E. C. Knight was called out. He came forward and made a striking plea for a soldiers' mon-ument for which he was loudly applauded. Then having returned to the village, the people quietly dispersed, counting the day among those well-spent.

ORATORIO OF ESTHER,

The Beautiful Queen, at the M. E. Church, Mexico, Wednesday and Thursday Evenings, June 10 and 11, 1874.-Represented in splendid Persian, Median and Jewish Costume—19 Solo Person ations-Chorus of 30 voices-L. Miller, Director.

It will greatly assist those who attend this magnificent Oratorio, to have recently read the Book of Esther. The following is an outline of the performance: The Scribe reads passages from the Book of Esther, Chap. 11., which is followed by chorns of Persians, "Haman! Haman! Long live Haman," all bowing as he passes. Soon Mordecia enters, when Haman and the chorus sing, "Behold this Mordicai in scorn. The curtain is drawn reveals King Ahasueras and guards, when Haman after salutation, request the destruction of the Jews, which the king grants.

The scribe again reads from Esther, chap, III. With wine in hand the king and Haman sing "A Song of Joy." Amid their glee the Prophetess enters and sing "So o'er the wicked." All stand aghast at the revelations and the curtains hide a most impressive tableaux.

We next have the Jews before us with bowed heads as Mordecai enters and sings, "Wo is me." Queen Esther enters from the right and sings, "Israel, O Israel," followed by the chorus. They urge Esther to go to the king. Being pursuaded, at the peril of her life, she The speaker never before wished that for me." As the good old stars and Stripes. It was really a good for me." As she goes all kneel and sing, sight, at the hotel where we were staying, "To thee O Lord we lift our cries." Then all rise while "He that goeth forth and weepeth" is sung.

The scribe reads from Esther, chap v the king being on his throne. Esther enters and approaches him timidly; being received favorably, she invites him and Haman to her banquet. After acceptance he sings, "Long live our beauti-Queen," and she responds, "Long live our noble King." The next scene presents Haman and the Persians, he reading to them, when the Chamberlain sings: "Haste to the banquet hall." Mordecai passing by, the Persian Prince sings: "Mordecai, the Jew, shall no longer sit in scorn." Solos follow by Median Prince and Princess and Haman, when Zeresh sings a propos al for a gallows for Mordecai and all join in a merry chorus. Part Second is introduced by the Jews who sing: "God is the refuge of his people," Mordecai sings: "In thee O Lord do I put my trust." The scene closes with a beautiful tableaux.

The scribe next reads to the King reminding him of the past services of Mordecai unrewarded. Haman enters and asks to wear the royal apparel. The king directs him to put it on Mor-As they retire the Jews and Persians appear and join in "Aha! proud Haman begins the fall." After sundry quartette, trio, solo and chorus, Mordecai's sister sings: "For thou hast been a strength to the poor." Zeresh plaintivly: "Thy galling defeat," when the chamberlain bids: "Haste, haste to the banquet

At the banquet the king and Haman approach the queen and sing: "Long live our beauteous queen." After responses she petitions him to spare her and her known grave. THIRD LETTER

LOUISVILLE, May 15, 1874. Our stay in Louisville, though quite brief, was very pleasant. It is one of the most beautiful cities we have ever seen, and has a population of about 150,-Its streets are broad and kept in fine condition, and Broadway, the street of the city, is very handsome indeed, and on either side of which are residences that give evidence of much wealth and

Reader, if you ever visit Louisville, don't fail to see Cave Hill cemetery. It is one of great interest and beauty, and contains many fine monuments, among which we noticed those of Hon. James Guthrie and Gen. Buckner. The graves of the Union and the Confederate soldiers occupy different plots of ground, but equal attention is paid to both. In the midst of the burial place for Union soldiers is a monument shaped like a cannon, at the base of which are quite a number of cannon balls. While looking at those graves, the great struggle for the supremacy of the Old Flag was visibly brought to mind, and the noble and heroic part that our own town and county took in that terrible struggle; but glad are we to know that there is a growing disposition among the people of both North and South to shake hands and be friends again, glorying in one country and to see one of our party who was a brave soldier in the Union army, and one who was on Gen. Lee's staff, shake hands cordially; and as they talked of some of the incidents of the late war, they became quite animated, and on parting they seemo have the most friendly feeling one toward the other. Louisville likes to boast of her Maxrell House, and she has a right to, for it is one of the finest in the country; its arrangements are almost perfect, and its table all that can be desired. This city has also an institution called the "Masonic Widows' and Orphans' Home." In this Home 122 widows and orphans of masons are cared for. It is indeed a Home. Nothing is left undone to promote the comfort and well-being of its nmates. The building cost $105,000, and is a splendid structure. We have not quite done with Louisville. We should do heran injustice did we not say that she has a great many negroes, about as many mules, and last, but not least, a arge number of handsome ladies. On the morning of the 16th inst., we started from Louisville for Cave City, on the Louisville & Nashville road. our way thither we passed Mumford, where some fighting occurred between the Union and Confederate soldiers in the early part of the war; some of the earthworks are still to be seen there.

While at Cave City, waiting for the teams to take us to the Mammoth Cave, some of our party had quite a chat with two negro women who were at the depot. When asked if they had ever heard of Seward or Sumner, they gave no reply; but on being asked if they had ever heard Supervisors, Oswego Co. : DEAR SIR :- Having visited sixeen counties during the last four weeks, in different parts of the State, we feel warranted in saying that public sentinent is decidedly in favor of changing the present mode of assessing real and personal property.

Conventions of Supervisors and Ascounties, at which resolutions have been terests should be represented in Congress past agreeing to assess all property according to law. In other counties, conventions have been called to consider the We, therefore, earnestly recommend

(if no action has yet been taken,) that you call a Convention of Supervisors and Assessors of your county at an early day, not later than June 6th, and take such action on this important subject as may be deemed advisable. We advise Assessors to assess all property at its full and true value, as the law prescribes. Also, that Assessors canvass their repective towns together, viewing each piece of proprety, and discarding all forner assessments in order that the joint judgment of the three Assessors as to he true value may be ascertained. We trust this will commend itself to he good judgment of all, and we believe

Mr. Savage thought it a most singular optical illusion and was going to write to the Scientific Investigator about it, but Mrs. Savage suggested that her nerves had suffered enough, and it was time to dismiss the cook. New York's New Departure.

The proposed change in the New York Institution has finally brought forth comments in the papers published for the deaf and dumb. The Silent World of May 15th has an article on this subject, which I heartily recommend for the perusal of every right-minded man. The Board of Directors must be thoroughly acquainted with the philosophy of deaf-mute education to hazard such a change directly in the face of well established and long-tried experience. Or down to breakfast one morning, and in it may be they are desirous of creating a sensation by attracting attention to the institution. Some years ago they did something of this kind by appointing a Superintendent and resident physician, arguing that it was necessary to have two heads to the institution because it had grown to be so large. Do they pretend to say now after several years' experience that this change is a success? They have only succeeded in spending thousands of dollars, making experiments not directly connected with the education of the pupils. If they say it is necessary to have resident physician so as to have one on hand to meet every emergency and every patch, why has not this beautiful arrangement resulted in a greater decrease in the mortality of the pupils? Facts guments. On the contrary, since the first of January the institution, has had of its inmates.

This next change is another of their absurd notions, but looking at the past record of the institution for the last three or four years, no one could expect anything better of them. The Board has found out, at last, that it has been a rather expensive luxury to keep a resident physician, so rather than go back on their own resolutions, they propose to cut down the expenses of the intellectual lepartment to make up the deficiency thus caused by creating an administrative department.

To drown all righteous indignation that might arise from such a proceeding upon their part, they raise a louder hue and cry at the inability of the pupils to engage in handicraft, when they leave school, for want of a better training in the work-shops. They, therefore, propose that the pupils shall spend half of their time in the work-shops and the other nalf in the school-rooms, arguing that northern breeze that played through the such a plan will give the pupils a better trees tempered the rays of the sun, and knowledge of handigraft without inter- made the atmosphere soft and exhilaratfering with their intellectual developing. The same arguments hold good past, and has given splendid results, but room that morning, and the cuckoo clock in respect to the boys in the shoeshop and in the tailor's shop. But this is not all, for of these 30 boys, who become so skilled in handicraft that he show that no matter how well he has been trained, he is far behind the workmen found engaged in that particular calling, so it follows that before he can command equal wages with his fellow workmen he is obliged to spend a year or two and often three years in learning his trade over again. Mind, this is not guess work, for I have taken particular pains to ascertain the actual facts. Now how is this change going to benefit the pupils? The institution was not built, and is not supported by the State to attempt to teach the pupils a trade, but, on the contrary, to give them an education whereby they can so use their knowledge as to learn a trade in a work-shop away from the institution. New York Notes-

My DEAR RIDER :- We had an exhibition last Tuesday, in connection with our annual meeting for election of directors. I will describe, as far as I can, the features of the occasion. School closed at eleven o'clock, and the pupils, after their lunch at that hour, dispersed to get themselves pre-sentable. Meantime let us take a look in doors. The parlors and reception rooms had been beautifully decorated with flowers, and in each there were cages of canaries, singing sweetly. The main hall had also its floral decoration, and there were hanging clusters just under the stairway of the approach to the dining room, tastefully arranged, and forming almost an arch. The chapel had, near its platform, little stands, on which rested beautifully carved vases, filled with choice gatherings from the green-house, and from the woods and valleys surrounding the institution. In the reception room in which the directors held their election, an artistic drawing of the more varied may then be expected. Clerc Bust hung near one of the windows of the book case. Below there was an engrossed scroll reading thus:

Gas as a Cure for Dumbness.

A curious story is told by the Springfield (Mass.) Republican of the way B A. Leonard, a dumb man, residing in Southbridge, that State, recently recovered his voice. He lost it about a year ago, while recovering from an attack of cerebro-spinal meningitis; but a few mornings ago, he was awakened about 4 o'clock by a sense of oppression and faintness. He became conscious enough to understand that gas was escaping from a coal stove, and that he would soon die unless he could get to fresh air; so, after many falls and tumbles, he gained the outside door, when he fainted, but was soon aroused by the lapping and tugging of a faithful Newfoundland dog.
